Mar 30, 2020 Embodiments of the present invention relate generally to a process of semiconductor chip fabrication, and more particularly to methods of etching one or more layers of a semiconductor structure. When fabricating semiconductor devices, various layers are deposited over a semiconductor substrate. During the deposition process, a plurality of subsequent deposition processes is generally performed to form a plurality of sequential layers. In particular, two of such deposition processes may comprise forming a metal layer and a barrier layer. By forming a barrier layer over a metal layer, subsequent etching processes may be performed to form a metal line between two doped regions of the semiconductor substrate. However, during the subsequent etching processes, the metal layer may be damaged or undercut. In particular, since the underlying barrier layer is relatively thin, the barrier layer may be etched away during the etching processes to form voids in the metal line. For example, in order to etch a metal line, various etching processes are performed through a mask. An
