“With last year’s FIFA 20 (excluding FreeStyle) we looked at a lot of animation work that could be captured and stored in our movement libraries. It became evident that storing everything on disc would be prohibitively expensive, so we designed an intelligent method to capture and store in RAM only the data that was needed,” said Christian Seeger, Head of FIFA Simulations at SEGA. “Because the movement data is captured in real-time, we have a far bigger data set for players to move in, resulting in a more reactive and dynamic game experience. From a technical standpoint, the player models and the physics of the game have also been improved to further deliver a top-quality and immersive game experience.”

Hybrid Frostbite/Game Maker Content Acceleration Frostbite, SEGA’s advanced graphics technology engine, has received a significant upgrade. “Frostbite 21” allows players to interact with new types of terrain and particles thanks to its hybrid functionalities between Game Maker and Frostbite. This enables a high-level of content creation, as well as efficiency improvements for every game mode: “Frostbite 21” offers a simplified user interface, and also allows for the creation of large-scale level environments with millions of objects. With the help of Game Maker, players are able to easily create and animate unique NPCs in a procedural environment, resulting in the ability to add a wide variety of new custom player models, faces, animations and behaviors to the game, such as player expressions, types of noises, gestures, and even languages. This technology also opens up the door to a wide variety of fascinating scenarios and unique missions, resulting in a more immersive and reactive experience for gamers. Frostbite 21 enables players to access their own in-game assets, helping them to easily find and interact with them. Frostbite 21 also allows us to significantly improve collision detection and interactions between characters and objects, which helps to deliver a more life-like and immersive gameplay experience. Frostbite 21 also enables the creation of a wide range of varied expression types, allowing players to work in more realistic ways. On the Game Maker side of things, players now have the ability to automatically capture facial expressions, speech and body language from all animation assets through the UI, including the auto-imported facial expressions from the Frostbite version of the game. This enables players to easily create unique scenarios that may be
