Q: Can't install Ubuntu 13.04 on AMD Athlon II Dual Core X2
First time when I try to install Ubuntu 13.04 on my new PC with AMD Athlon II Dual Core X2 I saw this error: [boot] "The system is booting in insecure mode" My question is: Is this normal? I have checked on the internet that there are some people who have the same problem and it seems that it was a problem of the motherboard. Is this the case or it's not possible to put an AMD Athlon Dual Core X2 in this motherboard? My motherboard is: ASUS-G71V
Thank you!

A: That is definitely not normal. Your problem is the PCI-E, it's too old and the motherboard has just a single PCI-E x16 slot. Do not try to install Ubuntu, you have no chance. Only upgrade your BIOS or wait for the motherboard to be updated.

Q: Is there a way to send data from a button using an event? I want to have a button that will send data to a page. This data is saved on the page and changes depending on the data when the data is sent. Currently, the page just has a blank area that says Sent on it when that button is clicked.

A: From what I understand, you are expecting one big push, and that's fine. If you want to have a button that sends data in the background for several actions, you can just embed a form in the button. Something like this (I kept your example): send data A: You are looking for Background Tasks which are explained here. --- title: "Declarative Enforcement of Legal Restrictions, Data Handling" ms.date: "03/30/2017" ms.assetid: 039b4846-42f6-4dff-8e61-bb9a7e3e1f2c --- # Declarative Enforcement of Legal Restrictions, Data Handling Active Directory provides declar

(BP) and electrolyte homeostasis. Therapeutic interventions (particularly those targeting the RAS) are often fraught with problems related to dose- and agent-related adverse events. The clinical efficacy of

there has been an increase in the use of ambulatory blood pressure monitoring (ABPM) in assessing the antihypertensive efficacy of various antihypertensive agents. ABPM has allowed for the detection and management of non-compliant patients and has facilitated more meaningful assessment of the true efficacy of antihypertensive agents as they are used in the clinic. Factors that may influence the efficacy of RAS inhibitors include concomitant antihypertensive therapy, age, race, sex, body weight, and other characteristics such as renal function and comorbid conditions. In some individuals, RAS blockade produces BP reductions similar to those that might be expected from renin-angiotensin system blockade in the absence of confounding antihypertensive therapy.

Careful assessment of patients using ABPM is particularly important for patients receiving RAS inhibitors because these agents may affect renal tubular handling of sodium and potassium and their effects on drug clearance may be reflected in the interpretation of ABPM values. Dose titration and avoidance of potentially adverse interactions

Rabbi Yehuda Shlomo asserted that “no one is permitted to settle permanently” in Israel, “not Arabs, and certainly not African immigrants.” The rabbi made the remarks during an interview with the Honenu human rights organization, which deals with constitutional issues involving Israel and the Jewish people. Shlomo said that Islam is the only religion allowed in the country, and migrants from some

African countries are not permitted to settle permanently. “If we are to understand the exclusive sovereignty of the State of Israel, then we must have a place for the state to determine who it wants to live in it,” the rabbi said. Israel Immigration, Absorption and Diaspora Affairs Minister Sofa Landver reacted to the statements and said the rabbi’s comments were untrue. “I called him [Rabbi Shlomo] to tell him that his words are not in accordance with the facts, and to express my sorrow for this.” Landver said she asked him to retract his statements. The Honenu campaign group, meanwhile, was quick to condemn Shlomo’s statements, saying that they “unquestionably represent racist discriminatory and hostile remarks.” “It is inconceivable that anyone is permitted to settle permanently” in Israel, the campaign group asserted in its statement. It also quoted statements made in a 1969 decision by the High Court of Justice regarding the legal status of African immigrants. In the decision, it was stated that these people cannot remain in Israel in order to practice the religion of Islam; they “live as subordinates, not equals.” “In the year 1968, there was a small group of legal immigrants from Sudan who did not want to change the people’s mindset, and were ready to assimilate in Israel’s society. This, however, was not accepted,” the campaign group quoted the decision. In a world where 3D printing is increasingly common, it’s a little surprising that one of the biggest 3D printing problems
